

PARADISE HORSE EXHIBITION.

A Large Display of Fine Animals.

The annual meeting and exhibition of the Paradise Horse Association took place Monday, 26th instant, according to announcement. E. D. Kelley, editor of the Winnemucca Silver State, writes his paper the following account:

ELECTION OF TRUSTEES.
The election of Trustees for the ensuing year was held at the office of the Secretary, C. C. Biles. The meeting was called to order by the President, J. R. Harvey, and the election resulted in the choice of G. W. O'Neal, E. W. Crutcher, B. Reconzone, J. R. Harvey and C. C. Biles.

THE EXHIBITION.

Horsemen and farmers, with their wives and children, from all parts of the valley and up the Little Humboldt, were in attendance, and everybody talked horse. There were specimens of all breeds and sizes of horses, from the bucking bronco to the 2,000 pound Clydesdale and Norman, at the exhibition grounds. J. G. Holloway, H. J. Pratt and P. W. Cunningham were elected judges, and R. T. Evans, Marshal. Some $500 in premiums were offered by the Association for the various classes of animals, and the competitors for prizes in all classes, except yearling colts, were stallions.

State School Supervision.

The Carson Free Lance says:

California pays her State School Superintendent of Public Instruction a salary of $3,000 per annum, gives him a deputy and a clerk, allows him $1,000 for traveling expenses; in short appropriates about $8,000 per annum for the office. Colorado pays her Superintendent of Public Instruction a salary of $3,000 per annum and all necessary traveling expenses. No railroad or stage company in the State charges a cent of fare, and his expenses are paid while attending the National Teacher's Association which meets annually. In California, Colorado and most of the other States there is associated with this office the same honors, and attached the same salary, as that of Secretary of State. Nevada, however, proposes to pay her State Superintendent of Public Instruction $1,800 per annum, with traveling expenses at $250, or none at all; expects him to visit annually the schools of the State and to hold institutes, paying out of his meager salary from six to ten cents a mile as railroad or stage fare. Having "emasculated" the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction, a position most honored in every other State in the Union, Nevada now has taken steps, through constitutional amendments, to complete the degradation of her shame by destroying beyond the hope of reascension her chief office of public education.

THE FIRST DEMOCRATIC CIRCUIT JUDGE IN TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

The appointment of ex-Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Baxter of the United States Circuit Court, reminds the country that it is the first appointment of a Democrat to a prominent position on the Federal Bench since the Republican party came into power twenty-five years ago. The circuit over which Judge Jackson will preside embraces the States of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee. The office is for life, at a salary of $6,000 a year, the incumbent having the privilege of retiring on full pay at the age of seventy.

A GRANT MEMORIAL.

The Life of the Hero Enlisted—Senator Sherman in the New South.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The anniversary of the sixty-fourth birthday of General Grant was celebrated this evening in the Metropolitan Church of this city, at which General Grant, when President, was a constant attendant. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Grant Memorial University of Athens, Tennessee, the purpose being to make known the works and objects of the institution, to the support of which the hero of Appomattox was the first cash subscriber and in aid of which he lent the influence of his name and the encouragement of his work and example. Speakers of eminence took part in the proceedings, and an audience comprising distinguished legislators, diplomats and soldiers filled every seat. Chief Justice Waite presided. The proceedings began with a paper by Bishop Andrews of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to Senator Brown, of Georgia, was assigned the honor of giving a life-sketch of General Grant. He enlarged upon the generosity and kindness of General Grant toward the conquered after the surrender of General Lee. Of Grant's Presidential career the orator said all would doubtless admit that he made some mistakes, but all would concur that his administration was characterized by many strong points and much practical good sense. When the prejudice of the times should have passed away impartial history would do full justice to Grant and his administration. As a military man he was one of the most remarkable known to his history. When passions kindled by men shall have passed away and those who took part in the struggle on either side shall have gone to their reward, succeeding generations of Americans will delight to honor as the great military chieftains of American history, the Confederate Robert E. Lee and the great Union hero Ulysses S. Grant, to whom Lee surrendered.

To Senator Sherman was allotted as a text "Grant and the new South," a theme which he said, was altogether too broad for the limited time in which he must discuss it. He spoke of the new South as one of the mysteries of the future, more a matter of hope and expectation than one of realization. The old South was an oligarchy in which one-third of the population were slaves, deprived of the advantages absolutely indispensable to civilization, while one-fourth of the population were admirably trained and disciplined for the higher duties of manhood. He compared the South to the oligarchies of Rome and Greece at the periods of their history, and her leaders to the Barons of Ruymede, who, when they met to form a magna charter, looked out very well for their own privileges against the King, but cared very little for the privileges of the people. Among the proudest names of history were found those of the South at the head of which, and head of all mankind, was that of George Washington. Grant impersonated forces which broke down the old South. That the new and habits of the old must be expected. A generation, much less a decade, could not change the ideas of centuries. Before, during and after the war parties were sectionally aligned. At last, now that slavery has disappeared, parties should be based upon other than questions between the North and the South. The North was ready for their consummation. There never was a time when the masses of the people felt less the party spirit than now. They desired to see old issues buried and the new living questions of the future presented as a line of demarcation between parties. (Applause.) Speaking of the conditions he hoped for in the new South, by men who fought on both sides, he said that at first there must be recognized in every part an equality of rights and privileges between man and man. The time was not far distant when this would be, The blacks and whites were inseparably mixed all over the South, and the rights of both must be respected. When this should be recognized universally this great difficulty of a new South would be at an end. The most important thing for the new South was a diversity of production. Under old institutions she produced cotton, rye and tobacco, and not much else. Work was performed by slaves. Now that all were free and every man had a right to choose his vocation, it was found that there was scattered all over the South stores of untold natural wealth, and the time was already at hand when the new South would compete with the North in all the great departments of production. The South must work out its own salvation. The North had tried in various ways to assist in managing local affairs for the South, and he must confess he had participated in that kind of business, but he was free to say it didn't turn out very well. [Laughter and applause.] The North could not rule the South any more than Great Britain could rule Ireland. The only thing the South wanted—and she wanted it badly—was education. The mandate of the nation had freed the slaves, and it was the nation's duty to help educate them. If the House of Representatives would second the work done by the Senate, and give from the ample resources of the Government some of its overflowing treasure to start the wheels of education, we should take a long step on the road to prosperity and union in the South. In conclusion, he warmly commended to the sympathy of his audience the Memorial University.

Senator Evarts spoke of General Grant's selection by George Peabody as one of the directors of his University, and although associated with him on the board were men who had attained prominence as scholars, lawyers and in other walks of life, Grant, the soldier and President, was the most modest of that board, and was the equal of any of them.

Ex-President Arthur Improving.

New York, April 28.—There was a gratifying change in the condition of ex-President Arthur yesterday, and if it can be maintained by the aid of his physicians for even a comparatively short time it will bring about an improved tone to his physical system as well as vigor to his mind, which has been somewhat shaded with melancholy of late. Monday night he slept better than he has done in several weeks. The effect was noticeable yesterday in the abatement to a large extent of the troublesome symptoms. Early in the morning the patient expressed a desire to get up from the couch which he has occupied so steadily for many weeks. He walked around his room and the one adjoining several times. The exertion did not seem to fatigue him, and was not attended by any unpleasant effects.

The California Republican State Convention.

The Republican State Central Committee has fixed the apportionment for the next State Convention on the basis of one delegate for each 250 votes cast for Blaine and Logan. This gives Sacramento county 19 delegates, and San Francisco 103. The total number will be 458. The Convention will meet at 3 p. m. on August 25th, in Los Angeles. Delegates to the State Convention shall be chosen as the County Committees may direct, with the exception of San Francisco, where they shall be chosen by Assembly districts at an open election, held under the Porter Primary law, on the 14th of August. The test will be: "Did you vote for James G. Blaine, or would you have done so if you had the chance? Will you vote the Republican ticket at the next election?"

The Senate Committee on Public Lands has again decided unanimously to report adversely upon the nomination of Dement to be Surveyor-General of Utah. He will not be confirmed this time.

Rev. Leonard, the rector of St. John's Episcopal Church at Washington, has been summoned to New York to see ex-President Arthur.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.
He is Given an Enthusiastic Series of Southern Greetings.

MONTGOMERY, (Ala.), April 27.—Jefferson Davis left his home at Beauvoir, Miss., accompanied by his youngest daughter, at 11 o'clock this morning. They were in a special car in charge of a committee of citizens of Montgomery, who went to escort them. At the stopping places between this city and Mobile, great crowds gathered. Local military companies fired salutes, children waved handkerchiefs and shouted, and all pressed to the car to shake the hand of the man who led the cause of the South during war times. Many one-legged and one-armed soldiers were waiting to see him and all had shouts of welcome. Mr. Davis stood or sat near the rear of the car. He was too feeble to speak, but gave a hearty hand-shake to all. The train reached here at eight o'clock to-night. The scene has never been equaled, and eclipsed the inaugural reception in 1861. Houses were illuminated, fire-works brightened the heavens, artillery boomed, and a dozen bands played, while the shouts of thousands mingled with the roar, and added to its volume. The local military companies and Governor O'Neal and staff were at the depot to receive Mr. Davis. It was difficult for the carriage in which he sat, which was drawn by four white horses, to make its way through the surging mass of humanity that blocked the streets. All this, despite the rain from above and the mud beneath. Arriving at the Exchange Hotel about after about greeted his entrance to the hotel. The ovation was the grandest of his life. The decorations on the houses were very elaborate. Flags hung from every window. The Davis special car was handsomely draped, and the national ensigns were conspicuous. General J. B. Gordon from Atlanta arrived shortly before Mr. Davis, and was received at the depot by the military. An escort of the survivors of his old Sixth Alabama Regiment met him a few miles from the city. He was welcomed on his arrival in the city in a speech by Alderman Waite, the acting Mayor. General Gordon replied in a speech, brief but pointed and eloquent. The demonstration over him was hearty and heartfelt. Mr. Davis retired at an early hour. His health is good, but he is not strong. The feeling shown him to-day greatly touched him, as it is the first expression of any consequence since the close of the war. His speech to-morrow will be short. The occasion is a lecture by him and an address by General Gordon in aid of the monument to be erected here to the soldiers of Alabama who fell in the war.

New York, April 28.—A special from Montgomery, Ala., says: This section seems to have gone wild with excitement. More than 10,000 citizens stood in the muddy streets, in a drizzling rain, to welcome Jefferson Davis to the capital of Alabama. He reached here about 8 o'clock. As the train drew into the depot here it was received with a boom of many cannons, and the old familiar yell of the Southern multitude. There were thousands of people at the railroad and the scene both there and on the street beggars description. It was with difficulty that he could reach his carriage. The journey up the street in the face of a falling rain was slow on account of the surging crowd which pressed upon the carriage at every step. The Montgomery Grays, clad in the old regulation oiled cloth which was so familiar during the war, marched in front, preceded by the band playing "Dixie." Following the vehicle containing Mr. Davis marched the Montgomery Blues in the regulation uniform of the standing army. When the hotel was reached the crowd had swelled in volume until the streets and squares surrounding it were a sea of faces. As the driver drew up in front of the entrance the motto "Our Hero" caught his glance on the opposite side of the street and "Welcome" was twined in evergreens over the door. Just as he alighted a great piece of fireworks extending nearly across the square was set off, making in flames the words: "Welcome Our Hero," surmounted by eleven stars, representing the States of the Confederacy. Mr. Davis seemed to be overwhelmed with the heartiness of his reception. When he reached the top of the stairs leading to his room, crowds of ladies awaited his coming.

Some of them lost their self-possession in the excitement of the moment and literally threw their arms about his neck, and as he passed through the hall they constantly gave vent to their expressions of regard for him. As he entered his room they threw flowers in his way, and his apartment was strewn with roses.

STANFORD ON COMMERCE.

The Senate Listens to the California Senator's First Address—The Interstate Commerce Bill—Denying to Railroads the Right of Competition.

In the United States Senate on Monday Senator Stanford made his first set speech when the Interstate Commerce bill was taken up. The following is a synopsis of his remarks:

It purports, he said, to be an act to regulate commerce between the States. He had read it with a good deal of care, but did not find anything in it that regulated commerce. Everything in it was in regulation to the carrier only. "Commerce" had a well defined meaning. It meant trade, barter, interchange of commodities—matters with which the carrier in the transaction of his legitimate business had no concern whatever. He therefore thought the title of the bill ought to be changed to express its true meaning. Instead of being called a bill to regulate commerce, it should be called a bill to regulate carriers. If it were a bill to regulate the shippers and owners whose goods the carriers moved, the title would be more appropriate. He might be told, perhaps, that there were judicial decisions to the effect that the regulation of the carrier was the regulation of commerce, but when legislation was proposed it was entirely legitimate to discuss the question as an original matter, and to determine it upon the principles which seemed to be involved. There was a great difference between the possession of power and its exercise. Of course, the constitution plainly gave Congress the right to regulate commerce between the States, but as the carrier has nothing to do with the controlling of shipments of goods, wares and merchandise, or their ultimate disposal or destination, the regulating of him, or determining the price he should receive for his services, could have no relation to regulating commerce between the States.

Why should the charges of a road carrying across a non-paying line between the States be different from what were charged for the same service on either side of that line? Would it not be making our State lines more or less obstacles to free intercourse? Would it not be converting our State lines into something very nearly akin to a frontier? What did our friend say who had been always so anxious to claim that we were of right one great family, with free business intercourse between ourselves, and what did our States rights friends say to the general Government interfering and controlling their local institutions? It had been said that the right to regulate a railroad carrier was peculiar in that a corporation operating a railroad was a creature of the State. If there was anything in this argument, it could not apply here in Congress, as Congress had nothing to do whatever with creating the corporation. Its existence was entirely by virtue of State laws, and it had under those laws the right only to operate within the jurisdiction of the State. Of course, he excepted some of the Pacific roads. It was pertinent to inquire into the wisdom of this kind of legislation, assuming that the authority for it existed.

The right of association was a natural one, and it was the duty of the National and State Legislatures to aid that natural right, and that Senator Stanford contended, was what the legislation of various States, in providing for the incorporation of railroad companies, had done. The incorporation was made by individual incorporators as much so as a partnership between individuals was established by themselves. The character of railroad investments as compared with others was set forth by the fact that the States could and did exercise the right of eminent domain in order that railways might be constructed. The State could not exercise this right for the benefit of the railroads. It only exercised it because the investment was of that peculiarly beneficial character to the public that it might be said to be a public good. The result was, moreover, that the railway companies must pay the individuals deprived of the control of their property under the right of eminent domain, whatever might be the value of that property. The State paid nothing. Now, if the investment in railroads was so beneficial to the public, why should not investors be permitted to reap the same full rewards of the wisdom of their investments, their industry and their management and direction thereof as though the same capital, wisdom and industry had been employed in a business of less importance in the interests of the State, and in whose behalf the State could not, if solicited, exert the right of eminent domain.

In discussing the question of the right to regulate railway fares and freights in a manner which would necessarily impair the earning capacity of these roads, we should not forget that the investments were made by individuals. If the railways were so important to the public surely these individual investors ought not to be discouraged by the apprehension that the value of the investment might be lessened by adverse legislation. Besides, inasmuch as labor enters very largely into the construction of railways and continues in their operation, any attempt on the part of Congress to fix the price of railway compensation was to fix the price of labor. Further, in all efforts to regulate railways Stanford found no guarantee against impairment of their income. If legislation interfered to decrease the income the value of property was affected to the extent of the diminution of the income. This was taking property with compensation; it was confiscation. There never had been a bill introduced into any Legislature purporting to regulate railways against which the owners of the roads did not find occasion to protest, on the grounds that it diminished the income producing quality of their property.

Now being legitimate and desirable, as was established by the exercise of eminent domain—not in behalf of the railway company, for the State has no right to do that, but in behalf of the people—and the State being justified in regarding the railroads as public benefits, why should they, after completion, have less protection from the laws than other property, or why should they be made the object of direct and injurious legislation? The railroads had no legal monopoly of business, since they had no exclusive privileges. Practically this bill denied to the various railroad companies the right of competition. It precluded shippers from reaping their right to the advantage of competition, and caused the railway companies an actual loss. In a low rate for a longer distance carriers must submit to loss from the usual rates on shorter distances, or else abandon the business at competing points. Under the force of competition carriers were compelled to take business over their roads a long distance at a lower rate than they would receive for a shorter distance. No railway company would do this if the rate to be charged was a matter outside its control. For this reason rates were cut down below the average cost for transportation and freight was often moved at less than the average cost. Low rates, if they paid anything above direct expenses consequent upon the movement, aided to sustain the railways, and the better enabled them to move the traffic at non-competing points. Railway companies could not ignore the various circumstances that established competition much of which depended on the geographical condition of the country. The shipper for a short distance was not charged more but the shipper for a long distance was charged less, because the carriers could not help themselves. No legitimate enterprise should be discouraged, least of all those that added most to the convenience and comfort of the people and to the wealth, strength and dignity of the nation.

Robert Lincoln Out of Politics.

LOUISVILLE, April 27.—Robert Lincoln, ex-Secretary of War, arrived here to day on business connected with the approaching sale of the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Railway. When his attention was called to an editorial in a Southern paper pointing out his claims to the next Presidential nomination by his party, he said: "That editor knows more about it than I do." He insisted that he had retired to private life in Chicago, and would only talk about a proposed fishing trip.

TOWN AND COUNTY.

FRIDAY.....APRIL 30, 1886.

BREVITIES.

There are ten prisoners in the county jail.

The west-bound train was an hour late last night.

Freight traffic on the C. P. railroad is decreasing.

The delinquent list of the Orr Ditch Co. will be found elsewhere.

There is considerable building and repairing going on about town.

District Attorney Torreyson, of Ormsby, was in town yesterday.

The Truckee river is too high and muddy for successful trout fishing.

A. Banta and wife departed for California last night on a pleasure trip.

Julius Isaacs, formerly of Grey & Isaacs, arrived in town last evening on a trip to Carson.

The Prince of Wales has been re-elected Grand Master of the Free Masons in England.

For nice letter heads, bill heads, cards, and job printing of all kinds, call at the JOURNAL office.

The Reno Steam Laundry is running in full blast, and there is now no question as to the success of the enterprise.

Needham's furniture store is having an addition built to the rear end, and the property is otherwise being improved.

The air was clouded with dust during the high wind yesterday afternoon, in spite of the diligent use of the street sprinkler.

H. T. Cresswell, District Attorney of Lander county, and J. F. Dennis, of the Central Nevada, passed through to Carson yesterday morning.

Mrs. James Sterling has disposed of her property in Wadsworth, and will likely make Truckee her future home, although her plans are not definitely arranged.

Farrington Brothers passed through here yesterday afternoon with thirteen fine Hereford bulls, which they are moving from San Jose to their Cloverdale ranch in Nye county.

Miss Rosset, a full sister to Maud S. has just arrived at Senator Stanford's Palo Alto ranch, to be bred to Electioneer. She was sent by the managers of the Alexander stock farm in Kentucky, one of the most prominent breeding establishments in the United States.

The reading public have long been puzzled over the connection of Queen Victoria's family affairs, the German hog market, and George Becker's Pacific beer and excellent hot lunches. Drop in at noon and sample his cool refreshing lager, and you will find there is no nonsense about it.

The widow and two children of Henry S. Carrier, the passenger who committed suicide on the emigrant train last Tuesday, near Wadsworth, left on yesterday morning's train for their home in the East. The family were in destitute circumstances, and a collection was taken up from among our citizens to defray their expenses on the route.

A row near the depot which attracted the attention of passers-by yesterday noon, proved to be a dispute between two tramps over the division of a "hand out" which one of them had rustled. Although the air was blue around the heads of the penniless perambulators for a few minutes, no blood was shed and no arrests were made.

Residents of California, and portions of this State, who have occasion to stop over here for a day or so, cannot help remarking the thriving appearance of Reno's business interests, as compared to that of other towns along the line of the railroad. The general business depression of the whole country during the past Winter was of course felt by our merchants to some extent, but it appears to have loosened its hold here earlier than in less favored localities, and times are rapidly improving.

TRAPPING.
Two of Winnemucca's Citizens Meet With Good Success.

The Silver State says about the 20th of November last Robert Kemp and William Wear, two of our well-known citizens, started out on a regular trapping and hunting excursion. They provided themselves with a horse and buggy and took some twenty traps along with them, besides guns and ammunition. They took along a cooking stove and lots of provisions, and had a large tent that made a very comfortable house to live in. They coursed the Humboldt river for about forty miles up from this place, and found lots of game, and their success in trapping was up to their most sanguine expectations. They returned home on April 1st, having been absent over four months. They found lots of game, and succeeded in trapping many animals that were valuable for their furs. They brought home the skins of forty beavers, the most of which were very large, and we noticed among them one little baby beaver skin; ten very beautiful otter skins; eight lynx skins, beautiful specimens of that ferocious animal; six coyote skins, which make fine furs; twelve mink skins, which are highly valued; one badger skin; twenty-four skunk skins of the large kind, and which are valuable for fur, and twelve muskrat skins, which are small, but the fur is very nice. They represent that they had a right good time, and found it more profitable for them than to remain in town during the Winter. They propose to send their furs to the San Francisco market, and will realize quite a sum of money from the sale of them.

UNIVERSITY.—Professor S. S. Hamill of Chicago, Illinois, has been engaged by Prof. McCammon to give a course of instruction in elocution to the students of the State University, and during his stay here two entertainments will be given in the city opera house under the auspices of the University. Prof. Hamill is well known throughout the United States and is the author of the "Science of Elocution." In his entertainment he is assisted by his daughter, Miss Alice Hamill. They will give a variety of recitations and Shakespearian impersonations.

I. B. Marshall presented to the University some specimens of copper from the copper mines of Chifton, Arizona, and N. Hammond some petrified greasewood from Walker River Reservation.

The Chinese population of Reno watch the approach of the 1st of May with as turbulent a mind as the school girl who hopes to be Queen of the May. The Celestial, however, has his rice and shrimps at stake and hopes on that day to gauge the efficacy of the boycott ordered by the Citizens Anti-Chinese Club, which will go into effect to-morrow. The leading Chinamen have kept well posted in the progress of the movement here, and have noticed with some satisfaction the falling off in the attendance at the meetings of late. If the boycott is to be a success, the enthusiasm of the leaders must not be allowed to flag.

FIRE ALARM.—About 11 o'clock A. M. yesterday, a fire broke out in the house occupied as a residence by Y. G. Joy, in the northwestern part of town. The hose companies were promptly on the spot, but the fire was under control before their arrival. The damage to the house and furniture will amount to about fifty dollars. No one about the place appeared to know how the fire originated, but it is supposed to have started from ashes or matches under the steps in the rear of the house.

COMMISSIONED.—Miles Goodman, the newly appointed Postmaster in Virginia City, has his official commission as such from Washington. He proposes entering upon the duties of his office Saturday—the first of May. William F. Dyer, the newly appointed Postmaster at Austin has also received his commission and taken charge.

BIRCH AND COTTON COMING.—Benjamin Cotton and William Birch, two old and tried minstrels in the burnt cork profession, will soon appear here, aided and abetted by a first class company of artists. It will be a gala night for fun lovers.

Beck beer day will be celebrated at some of the saloons in Reno.

TRUCKEE'S STEAM LAUNDRY.
Apparently a Failure—Offered for Sale.

The Truckee Republican, of Wednesday, says:

Truckee was the first to start a steam laundry, and like everything else that it does, accomplished it in the most approved manner. The very latest and best machinery was purchased, the best laundrymen that could be employed in San Francisco were secured, and all appliances known to the trade were purchased. The management was composed of the best business men in Truckee, but of men who had large business interests of their own that required personal attention. They were dependent upon others to gather work and secure patronage, and have been putting up from their own pockets the deficits in purchasing of machines, erecting buildings, and other sources. The original amount subscribed did not cover the original cost of the laundry, and as the deficiency had to be made up, they have done so. In consequence thereof, they have decided to sell the entire laundry at a price equivalent to one-half of its original cost, to any enterprising man who will take hold of it and run it. It is an opening that is very seldom offered, and will have no trouble in selling. Let some man who thoroughly understands the business, take hold of it, and there is no reasonable excuse why he should not make a profitable venture. Their "for sale" notice appears elsewhere, and should receive immediate attention. As, if not sold, the laundry will be closed down the first of the month. No Chinese need apply to purchase the laundry. A Chinaman can never again work in this community. Should the laundry close down, an opportunity will be given white women who are willing, to do washing, but it is believed that it will be in competent hands next week, who will run it in the interests of the public.

[New York for Blaine.

New York, April 27.—Captain Cheater S. Cole, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, speaking of the political feeling in the State, said yesterday: "The Republicans are nearly all for Blaine for President. He is the clear choice of the masses of the party at the present time. If the nominating convention should be held to-morrow he would be the choice of the New York delegation."
